Six are still missing in Lebanon

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Here are brief biographies of the other six Americans still reported kidnapped or missing in Lebanon:

Terry A. Anderson, 37, the chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press, was kidnapped by gunmen on March 16, 1985. Mr. Anderson's wife, Mikki, and 8-year-old daughter, Gabrielle, had left Beirut earlier because of concern for their safety. A graduate of Iowa State University, Mr. Anderson worked at AP bureaus in Tokyo and Johannesburg before being assigned to Beirut.

William Buckley, 56, a political officer at the U.S. Embassy in Beirut, was kidnapped March 18, 1984.

Mr. Buckley, a bachelor, was from Medford, Mass.

David Jacobsen, 54, administrator of the American University Hospital, was kidnapped on May 28, 1985. A divorced father of three from Huntington Beach, Calif., Mr. Jacobsen had taken up his post in Beirut at the end of 1984.

The Rev. Lawrence Martin Jenco, 50, was kidnapped Jan. 8, 1985. The Joliet, Ill., priest was a member of the Order of Servants of Mary. He directed Catholic Relief Services operations in Lebanon, serving both Christians and Moslems. "He always said that if he were to die, he'd like to die as a missionary," said his brother John Jenco, of Joliet, Ill.

Peter Kilburn, 60, a librarian at American University, failed to report for work on Dec. 3, 1984. Some statements made in the name of the Islamic Jihad have said he was kidnapped; other statements have said nothing about him. Mr. Kilburn, a native of San Francisco, suffered from a heart condition and hypertension.

Thomas Sutherland, 54, was acting dean of agriculture at the American University of Beirut when he was abducted on June 9, 1985. He was on leave from Colorado State University and had worked in Beirut for two years. His wife, Jean, also taught at American University.
